How Our Town Spends the Fourth

By Inez L. Gardner

The celebration of the Fourth of July is a very important event in the life of our town. The day is spent in a variety of ways, from the solemn to the joyous. The morning is spent in a solemn manner, with the raising of the flag and the playing of the national anthem. The afternoon is spent in a joyous manner, with the holding of a picnic and the playing of games. The evening is spent in a variety of ways, from the solemn to the joyous. The day is a day of national pride and patriotism.

The motto of the committee is "Everybody a part of the fun." The committee is made up of representatives from all parts of the town. The committee is responsible for the planning and execution of the celebration. The committee is made up of representatives from all parts of the town. The committee is responsible for the planning and execution of the celebration.

Boys and Girls are on the Committee

The committee which has the day in charge is a standing one, with a meeting every year to work out the celebration of the day. The committee is made up of representatives from all parts of the town. The committee is responsible for the planning and execution of the celebration. The committee is made up of representatives from all parts of the town. The committee is responsible for the planning and execution of the celebration.

As in every town, the boys were active youngsters who planned to do a bit of mischief. They were active youngsters who planned to do a bit of mischief. They were active youngsters who planned to do a bit of mischief. They were active youngsters who planned to do a bit of mischief.

When the boys realized that they were to be responsible for the bell-ringing, that everybody knew they were going to do it and expected it should be done right, they were more anxious than they have it done as well as possible. They were impressed with the dignity of their position as announcers of the day to the town at large. They were also the best night patrol that could be had, for they were jealous of their honor and saw to it very thoroughly that none of the other boys got in and rang the bells ahead of time.

The Parade is a Mardi Gras Carnival

The town has made a Mardi Gras out of it. "Antiques and Horribles" parade and has transposed it from the early morning hour to noon, when it is a part of the general parade. The attitude toward the boys was to help them to do well what they really wished to do but had done badly, the attitude toward the early morning "Horribles" procession was that it was the spirit of merrymaking gone wrong. A thing to be funny must be systematic, not a disorderly thing done in a disorderly way. So now the chief goes out to the General Committee that every boy who wanted to have a float or take part in the "Horribles" parade shall submit his plan to the Parade Committee. Every one is urged and encouraged to make as funny and as good a thing as possible. The committee assist if it can, and as every part and every club of the town are represented on the committee the whole town is drawn out for participation in the parade and picnic.

The parade was a very interesting one. The parade was a very interesting one. The parade was a very interesting one. The parade was a very interesting one. The parade was a very interesting one. The parade was a very interesting one. The parade was a very interesting one. The parade was a very interesting one.

The Whole Town is Represented

Big and little stores are represented in the parade. The big mills and large business houses put out an especially handsome effort, and all the societies in town, each of which has a delegate on the General Committee in charge of the day, send representatives into the line. Smaller business places show themselves. A German shoemaker, who is owner and sole employer in a one-room store, appeared on a float hung with shoes of his own making and with hanks, sat on a bench in the middle of the float and peddled shoes all the way around the course. A village blacksmith set his anvil and forge upon a drag and joined the procession, pounding away at the red hot iron and shaping shoes. The whole town, little and big, is represented. The various business houses pay their just proportion in the day's expenses and no more.

Hours of the Sick are Marked

The Red Cross Committee, one of the sub-committees, is very appreciated by the sick or invalids to whom it is about a necessity that the day be a quiet one. This committee divides the town into sections and send out its members to look out the house where a sick person is. The day before the Fourth the door of the house is closed, and the sick person is notified. The day of the Fourth the door is opened and the sick person is notified. The day of the Fourth the door is opened and the sick person is notified. The day of the Fourth the door is opened and the sick person is notified.

Other committees, too, look out for the general comfort on that day. The Drinking Water Committee, which is very appreciated by the sick or invalids to whom it is about a necessity that the day be a quiet one. This committee divides the town into sections and send out its members to look out the house where a sick person is.
