ON THE COVER:

Pictured (L-R) in front of the Kislak Real Estate Institute are three generations of Kislaks: John, Jason, and family patriarch Jay. The Kislak Family's generous $2 million dollar donation will ensure a bright future for Monmouth University's new undergraduate major in real estate, slated to start in fall 2007. The program will be the first of its kind in New Jersey.

Hail to the Hawks 2005-2006 Basketball Team!

The cover photo and caption about the NCAA tournament on the last issue of Monmouth University Magazine immediately caught my eye. It brings me great joy to see my alma mater share the accomplishments of her students with the American public.

In addition to the feature story, I thoroughly enjoyed the article on the Writing Center, as well as the biographies in the article. As noted, Jane DeTullio has truly revolutionized the organization and set-up of the Writing Center, making it a highly effective resource. As a former adjunct instructor of history and faculty tutor, I appreciated the extensive information about the Writing Center. Thanks for the great issue.

Singing the Praises of Yvonne Singer

What an incredible use of time, talents, intelligence, and determination! Not that this should be a surprise. Yvonne persevered just as boldly as humanly possible when pursuing her A.A. degree at Brookdale Community College. She worked the hard way then—manually—with photocopied pages. When she completed her studies at Brookdale, she left us with one of her first writing accomplishments from the soul: a huge, humane article in the college newspaper, The Stall. And that was just the beginning! I am so happy that she has been rightfully hired as a college professor. Her writings and insights are stupendous, and with her enthusiasm and determination, she is impacting a world of friends.

More Celli Memoirs ...

I can't imagine how I overlooked the photo of WMCX DJ John Celli, which appeared in the spring 2005 issue of the Monmouth University Magazine! John and I were good friends and fellow 1973 graduates of Long Branch High School, then went on to Monmouth College together. Whenever I knew that John was broadcasting, I'd go up to see him and "pull" records for him. Once when someone didn't show up to give the weather report, he threw a set of headphones on me, shoved a piece of paper in my hand, and pulled my chair into an adjoining booth, despite my protests. Then he said, "Here's Cheryl with the weather report." Well, I managed to stammer through it, ever mindful of how odd my voice sounded to me coming through the headphones.

The Kislak Real Estate Institute

Home Sweet Home of New Jersey's First Undergraduate Real Estate Major

BY DAN WEEKS

June was an eventful month for the Real Estate Institute at Monmouth University. On June 1, the institute held its Annual Leadership Excellence Award Dinner, at which it honored Emanuel Stern, the president and COO of Hartz Mountain Industries, Inc. One of the highlights of this year's gala was the announcement of a gift of $2 million from the Kislak Family Fund, which will enable the institute to meet its long-term goal of establishing an undergraduate program in real estate.

"The gift will enable us to finally introduce a real estate concentration as part of the bachelor's degree in Business Administration," says Dr. Donald Moliver, the institute's director. "This puts us in elite company because only about 65 colleges and universities nationwide have an undergraduate program in real estate, even though there are about 1,800 business schools in the country."

The program will be the first in New Jersey to offer undergraduates a real estate concentration for academic credit. Monmouth will join New York University, which Moliver says has established "a hugely successful program;" The Wharton School of Business at the University of Pennsylvania; Johns Hopkins in Baltimore; and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, all of which have recognized the importance of real estate as a profession and have established undergraduate programs.

"The Kislak family decided to make the donation to mark the 100th anniversary of the founding of the Kislak Real Estate Co., which began as a small commercial brokerage in Hoboken under the leadership of Julius Kislak and has grown into a nationwide full-service commercial real estate company. The Kislak Company, Woodbridge, is one of the largest real estate companies in the state. The University has renamed the institute the Kislak Real Estate Institute in recognition of the family's donation," explains Vice President of University Advancement Jeff Mills, who facilitated the naming of the gift.

"We wanted to make a substantial donation to our industry," says Jay I. Kislak, Julius's son. Julius Kislak, a Ukrainian immigrant, died in 1979. "Our contribution is one way of giving back to the profession." He noted that the gift would also honor his father. Mr. Kislak is chairman of the board of J.I. Kislak, Inc., Miami Lakes, Fla., the parent company of the Woodbridge firm.

According to Moliver, undergraduate education in the field has become increasingly necessary as real estate has gained recognition as a profession. "For decades real estate had been viewed as a trade, but today it is really a profession." He notes that in 2005 half of the wealth in the United States was related to real estate—either through personal property and investment or through allied professions, such as engineering, architecture, construction, planning, assessment, insurance, and law. Proof of "professionalization" can be seen in the interest that premier institutions of higher education are beginning to show in the real estate field. According to Moliver, in addition to the 65 or so institutions of higher education that have instituted undergraduate programs, Cambridge University has recently initiated a master's degree in real estate.

Jeff Mills says the Kislaks' gift will allow the University to overcome the prohibitive expense of introducing a new undergraduate program that will meet accreditation criteria. Says Moliver: "The Kislak gift has enabled us to move forward," he says. "We will be able to increase our resources and to hire additional qualified professionals to join our faculty."

The new concentration will give Monmouth students a significant advantage in the job market. "Most business majors who go into real estate have to learn on the job," says Moliver. "Our students will have a leg up because they will be exposed to finance, development, law, construction, and all facets of the real estate business. This should also be a significant advantage to the companies that hire them."

Moliver says the undergraduate concentration should be in place by fall 2007. The School of Business Administration currently offers a bachelor of science degree in Business Administration with concentrations in accounting, economics, finance, management, and marketing.

While the Kislak gift allows the Real Estate Institute to achieve one of its major objectives, Moliver says the real work has just begun. In addition to instituting the program, which requires hiring faculty and designing curriculum, the institute will continue to pursue ongoing goals of becoming a regional research center and database for real estate and economic development. The institute will also continue to furnish employee training and executive development in real estate and related fields.

"Down the road we would like to endow one more professorship," says Moliver. He expects that the funds to do so might be raised through the institute's annual Leadership Excellence Award Dinner. He says the second endowed professorship would support a faculty member who specializes in public policy and law, environmental concerns, eminent domain, affordable housing, and smart growth.

Dr. Moliver, who was instrumental in establishing the Real Estate Institute in 1992, currently holds the first endowed chair in real estate—the Steven and Elaine Pozycki Professorship of Real Estate. Steven J. Pozycki '73, who created the endowed chair with a $1 million gift in 2001, is the chairman and chief executive officer of SJP Properties, a commercial real estate investment, development, and management company based in Parsippany. Mr. Pozycki, who is also currently a member of the University Board of Trustees, received the Real Estate Institute Leadership Excellence Award in 1996.

Moliver credits Mr. Pozycki and Arthur Greenbaum with "putting the Real Estate Institute on the map," through their leadership and philanthropy. Mr. Greenbaum, Esq., of Greenbaum, Rowe, Smith, Ravin, Davis & Himmel, LLC, received the first Leadership Award in 1994. Monmouth University awarded him an honorary degree in 1996. Both men serve on the Executive Advisory Council of the institute.

THE INSTITUTE'S FACULTY, SAYS MOLIVER, "ARE PRACTITIONERS, NOT THEORISTS." EACH ONE HAS AT LEAST TWELVE YEARS' EXPERIENCE IN THE BUSINESS. CURRENT FACULTY INCLUDE:

STEVEN J. BRODMAN, a partner with the law firm of Ansell Zaro Grimm & Aaron.

The firm specializes in real property tax appeals, commercial and residential real estate, and borrower and lender financing.

JOHN GIUNCO, an officer in the law firm of Giordano, Halloran & Ciesla, PC.

Mr. Giunco specializes in land use and development, and the sale, acquisition, and financing of real estate.

WILLIAM T. KITLEY, a senior vice president of origination with GMACCM, now called Capmark Financial Group. Kitley has more than thirty years' experience in commercial real estate finance, development, and investment sales and has closed more than $6 billion in commercial financing.

PETER S. REINHART, senior vice president and general counsel for K. Hovnanian Enterprises, Inc. Mr. Reinhart was a member of the Real Estate Task Force of New Jersey's Economic Master Plan Commission under Gov. Whitman. He also served as president of the New Jersey Builders Association.

ROBERT C. SCHACHTER, a partner at Greenbaum, Rowe, Smith & Davis and chair of the firm's real estate department. Mr. Schacter is considered one of the top lawyers in the nation of those who specialize in real estate practice.

JOHN A. SOMERS, retired executive vice president of TIAA-CREFF and head of TIAA Investments. Mr. Somers supervises the acquisition of publicly traded bonds, direct placement loans to business and industry, commercial mortgage financing and real estate at TIAA-CREFF.

For decades real estate had been viewed as a trade, but today it is really a profession.

Stephen B. Siegel of Insignia/ESG and Patrick Murphy of CB Richard Ellis also made significant financial contributions to help establish the institute. Mr. Siegel donated $100,000 to fund the annual real estate lecture series, and Mr. Murphy established a $50,000 scholarship for children of public servants. Mr. Siegel also serves on the Executive Advisory Council. The fact that the Real Estate Institute at Monmouth was already well-established helped to convince the Kislaks to fund an undergraduate program.

From the beginning the Real Estate Institute has offered a certificate program for professionals in the field. To earn a certificate, one must complete a five-course program. The curriculum covers investment, asset management, consulting, development, and finance. Courses are offered on a ten-week basis.

The program is currently the only executive education real estate program in New Jersey, and those who have taken courses see immediate advantages. "Novice real estate professionals are only exposed to a few aspects of business," says Andy Roland, who earned an MBA at Monmouth in 1998. "If one enrolls in the Real Estate Institute, one will see multiple sides of the business, including development, leasing, financing, valuation, and real estate law." Roland enrolled in the certificate program's night classes in 1998 after landing a job as a real estate analyst at GMAC Commercial Mortgage.

In fall 2005, the institute initiated a real estate track as a component of the master's degree in business administration. The MBA requires completion of 51 credits, including 15 dedicated specifically to real estate. Required courses include Real Estate Law; Real Estate Analysis; Real Estate Finance, Investment & Taxation; Real Estate Lease & Negotiations; and Real Estate Regulations & Development.

Gina Melicore, who received her MBA with a concentration in real estate this June, is one of the first graduates of the new master's program. "More business majors should consider the real estate concentration," she says. "Bill Kitley and Don Moliver were two of my key professors at Monmouth, and getting to know them has helped me to learn so much about both the industry and the successful professionals who drive it."

Melicore entered the program in 2003 as a graduate assistant. She began working full time as an analyst at GMAC Mortgage, now CapMark Financial Group, Inc., in September 2005. There she was mentored by another Monmouth alumnus, none other than the aforementioned Andy Roland.

"Real Estate is a great industry to work in," says Melicore, who is now considering working toward a Ph.D. in real estate at either the University of Pennsylvania or the Manhattan Business School at the State University of New York. MU

Emanuel Stern Honored at 13th Annual Leadership Excellence Award Dinner

Nearly 600 luminaries turned out for the Kislak Real Estate Institute's 13th Annual Leadership Award Dinner, June 1, at Wilson Hall. This year's recipient was Emanuel Stern, president and chief operating officer of Hartz Mountain Industries, Inc., Secaucus. The dinner raised $330,000 to support the Institute.

"He's a dominant player in the real estate industry," says Dr. Donald Moliver, the director of the Kislak Real Estate Institute. "Hartz Mountain has about triple the holdings of the nearest competitor in industrial and commercial real estate in the state."

Indeed, since its founding in 1966, Hartz Mountain has become a regional powerhouse and one of the largest private owners of commercial real estate in the United States. Today, the company owns and operates 200 buildings in the New York/New Jersey area. It represents more than 38 million square feet of retail, hotel, office, and industrial space. The company also owns more than 200 acres of prime land in Northern New Jersey for future development.

Mr. Stern has been the president and COO of Hartz Mountain since 1997. He has been instrumental in the redevelopment of the Jersey City waterfront and has recently undertaken the redevelopment of the Ford Motor Co. plant in Edison. Both projects will serve as models for the redevelopment of urban and industrial space. Mr. Stern has also helped to revitalize lower Manhattan by developing two premier hotels—the SoHo Grand and the Tribeca Grand.

He is also active in public and cultural affairs. He is a trustee of the New York Historical Society and the Citizens Budget Commission of New York, as well as a board member of the Jewish Community of Manhattan.

"Emanuel Stern has really made a distinctive contribution to the industry through his vision and entrepreneurship," Moliver notes. "And fortunately for us, both he and his corporation have

Sima Kislak Jelin with brother

The Leadership Excellence Award is given each year to recognize "an outstanding individual for his or her distinctive contributions to the State of New Jersey and to the nation through a career in Real Estate." It also recognizes "the interdependent relationship between Monmouth University and the real estate industry." Recipients must either be residents of New Jersey or "regard New Jersey as an important locus of their corporate identity."

Previous recipients include: Arthur M. Greenbaum, Esq., HN '96, of Greenbaum, Rowe, Smith, Ravin, Davis & Himmel, LLC; Kevork S. Hovnanian of K. Hovnanian Enterprises, Inc.; Steven J. Pozycki '73 of SJP Properties; Anne Evans Estabrook of Elberon Development Co.; Benedict J. Torcivia, Sr., of Torcon, Inc.; Charles Klatskin of Binswanger/Klatskin; Alan B. Landis of The Landis Group; Stephen B. Siegel of Insignia/ESG; Mitchell E. Hersh of Mack-Cali Realty Corporation; John A. Somers of TIAA-CREFF; Patrick Murphy of CB Richard Ellis; and Ara Hovnanian, president and CEO of Hovnanian Enterprises, Inc.

INTO THE FUTURE

A RECORD NUMBER OF GRADUATES ARE HONORED DURING MONMOUTH'S 2006 COMMENCEMENT CEREMONIES

BY ELLIOTT DENMAN

"I am just beaming right now," admitted Linda Kelly of West Long Branch, trying to hold back tears of joy, but not really succeeding. Linda and Ed Kelly might have been the proudest parents in the universe at this moment, the late afternoon of May 17, 2006. Their son, Brian, had just graduated summa cum laude with a degree in biology and marine environmental sciences during Monmouth University's 72nd commencement ceremony at the PNC Bank Arts Center, Holmdel Township.

Brian Kelly had never seen the need to travel to a distant campus for his college education. A resident of West Long Branch, he knew all along there was a quality institution in his hometown, on a campus little more than a mile from his North Locust Avenue home. "I have never regretted staying close to home," he said.

And his parents saw him blossom as a Monmouth undergraduate. "Monmouth was just an awesome place," said Ed Kelly. "His professors really turned the light on for Brian. They were always right on. They were the best."

Brian Kelly will at last head further afield this fall, armed with a 3.94 grade-point average and a scholarship for graduate studies at Rutgers University.

Brian Kelly and 1,049 of his classmates constituted the largest graduating class in Monmouth history. A total of 740 earned bachelor's degrees, 300 acquired master's degrees, 10 took home associate's degrees.

Monmouth University Chairman of the Board Stephen Parks '68 and President Paul G. Gaffney flank honorary degree recipients (from L-R) Charles Gibson, award-winning former co-host of ABC-TV's "Good Morning America" and the new anchor for ABC's "World News Tonight"; Sara J. Bloomfield, director of the United States Holocaust Museum; and Frankie Valli, an original 'Jersey Boy' with the Four Seasons.

In a unanimous vote of confidence by the U.S. Senate, Noel Hillman '81 was confirmed in June as a federal judge for New Jersey. Hillman was instrumental as a lead prosecutor in the Jack Abramoff corruption case. He had worked since 2002 as the chief of the Public Integrity Section in the Criminal Division of the Justice Department. Prior positions included a stint in the U.S. Attorney's Office in New Jersey, where he served as deputy chief of the Criminal Division before his departure in 2001.

The joys of graduation day seemed to ripple in all directions from Shadow Lawn. Monmouth's diverse student body now includes the representatives of most of the nation's 50 states as well as more than 28 other countries. They are enrolled in seven undergraduate schools and the single graduate school. They have the choice of 48 undergraduate and graduate degree programs.

And now it will be up to Monmouth's Class of 2006 to put their education to best use in "the real world."

"It is your mission to learn how to think, how to handle life, how to interpret, how to form an argument and defend it," they were told by commencement speaker Charles Gibson, the award-winning co-host of ABC-TV's "Good Morning America" and new anchor of ABC's World News Tonight, who was presented an honorary degree of Doctor of Humane Letters by Paul G. Gaffney II, Monmouth University's President.

"But perhaps most important of all, in these four years," reminded Gibson, "it was your mission to develop a personal code of ethics. You are going to be tested at many places in your life. These tests will define you as a human being."

Wherever their future travels take these new Monmouth graduates—their "halfway house to life" now over—Gibson identified five things they'll need to carry with them always: "compassion, honesty, fairness, trustworthiness, and respect for others."

For Frankie Valli, an original "Jersey Boy" of the legendary Four Seasons group (whose record sales now number over 100 million and whose story is now being sung out as a Tony Award-winning Broadway hit), the path to his newly conferred honorary title, Doctor of Music, was a very special American odyssey. Although he never graduated from high school, Valli achieved international renown on stage and screen and in the recording world during a career that included many appearances on this same PNC Bank Arts Center stage. To him, the journey represented "a sound track of our lives."

"Only in America could this happen to a high school dropout," he said.

"I love all you guys out there," he told his appreciative audience. "There is so much ahead for you."

Sara J. Bloomfield, director of the United States Holocaust Museum in Washington, D.C., was presented the honorary degree of Doctor of Public Affairs. Bloomfield joined the Holocaust Museum not long after its founding in 1986 and has since seen it welcome more than 23 million visitors, among them more than 80 heads of state. The museum is more than "a living memorial" to horrific events of the past: it serves as a moral compass to those working to alleviate current horrors and to prevent future ones.

"Travel abroad, live abroad," Bloomfield said, urging Monmouth graduates to explore lands beyond America's shores. In whatever paths they chose, she asked them to strive to "repair a broken world" while "having a good life's adventure" along the way.

Dr. Bruce R. Normandia, an assistant professor in Monmouth's Department of Curriculum and Instruction in the School of Education, was saluted as 2006 recipient of the University's Distinguished Teacher Award.

Class of 2006 members venture forth knowing they have received a first-rate education and carrying with them memories and friendships that will endure for their lifetimes.

For Russell Anderson, who came to Monmouth from Chester, New York, in the fall of 1999, the present ceremony was as much a thrill for him as it was two years ago. Anderson earned a bachelor of arts degree in public communications in 2004 and now was back to receive his master's degree in corporate and public finance. Currently working as a certified personal trainer, he would like to explore future business opportunities combining both of those major interests.

It was on the hardwood of Boylan Gymnasium, however, that Anderson learned some of life's greatest lessons, in the give-and-take of varsity basketball. The former star forward and his Hawk teammates advanced to the "The Big Dance" of the NCAA Tournament in 2001 and 2004. While they bowed out in the opening round each time, it was the drama of getting-there through the Northeast Conference playoffs that he'll never forget.

"We've (Monmouth sports teams) never declined, we're always going for the top," he said with pride. "That's one thing about Monmouth, we have great coaches and administrative individuals. They always bring in the right people. Attending Monmouth was one of the greatest decisions of my life."

Shannon Weir of Millstone Township earned a degree in business management, but is in no hurry to leave the campus. "I've applied to grad school here and am waiting to hear if I've been accepted. So I hope I'll be back in the fall," she said. The human resources field now heads Weir's list of career destinations. And tops on her list of Monmouth memories are "all the great people I've met. They'll be my friends for life," she said. But the thrill of the ceremony itself will linger, too. "I think I'm going to be crying all day," she said.

Class of '81 Celebrates its 25th Anniversary

Other special commencement guests included members of Monmouth's class of 1981. Twenty-five years after their own graduation, they were back—appropriately garbed in silver academic gowns.

Mark Weres of Union, New Jersey, may be the new recipient of a business marketing degree, but he still has a huge undergraduate assignment ahead. As the starting third baseman on Monmouth's baseball team, he is heading to the NEC championship playoffs, hoping for a spot in the NCAA tournament—something that has eluded the Hawks since 1999. His greatest Monmouth memories: "Four years of varsity baseball with the greatest group of guys in the world." Arizona now beckons to Weres. "Hopefully, I'll get into something out there in advertising and commercials. And if it works out that it's in baseball, that would really be great."

For Falie Alexandre of Asbury Park, the emotions of the commencement ceremony ran deeper than for most. Ten years ago, her family had come to the U.S. from Haiti, seeking a better life, and here she was living out an American dream. With her undergraduate degree in accounting, Alexandre plans to be a CPA. "All my classes, all my teachers, they were wonderful," she said. "Everyone was so friendly. They always made me feel right at home. I can never forget any of this."

"Sure I'm sad to be leaving, but I know I couldn't have spent the last four years at a better place," said Tyler Azzarelli of Tampa, Florida, who received a bachelor's degree in marketing. Monmouth hoops enthusiasts are equally sad to see him depart. A star guard on the varsity basketball team, Azzarelli helped lead the Hawks to Northeast Conference titles and NCAA appearances in 2004 and 2006. When the Hawks needed extra punch to defeat Central Connecticut in the 2004 NEC title game, Azzarelli leaped forward to deliver 19 points and four key assists in a 12-point triumph. All this was a joy to headline-writers. At last, his numbers on court had topped those he earned in the classroom. Azzarelli, who hopes to continue playing in Europe or to venture into coaching, leaves Monmouth with a 3.93 grade-point average and summa cum laude distinction.

Tradition and emotion were again served with "Pomp and Circumstance," the day's theme song. But the refrains of "Alma Mater," music by Beethoven, lyrics by alumnus Louis P. Nappen, held just as true—"High above the ocean's roar, the Blue Hawks rise to meet the world."

"Go out now and write history," said President Gaffney at the ceremony's end. "Be well."

It was time to meet the world. MU

Some seventy years ago on the west side of campus, the Parson estate's one-time horse stables morphed into a new kind of form and function: Monmouth University's Department of Art and Design. The spaces—both inside and out—have become dynamic workplaces and showcases representing a broad range of creativity. From the outdoor artistry of the Blonder Sculpture Garden to the art studios smelling of potter's clay and the scents of the painter's linseed and pigment, the artist's individual form of expression is worked, reviewed, retooled, and revisited until the artist—or the course deadline—announces its completion.

Dean of Humanities Stan Green, Associate Dean Golan Mathbor, and Acting Co-Chair of the Department of Art and Design Michael Thomas have worked to revamp the curricula, spending a year streamlining and broadening the program as well as forging a B.F.A. degree in graphic design. An M.F.A. program may also be on the horizon.

The department has revamped the foundation program by splitting it into two areas. Program Director of Design Karen Bright oversees design and media. Program Director of Studio Art Tom Baker heads up the studio art area, including painting, intaglio and relief printing. Rounding out the department are Professors Vince DiMattio, who teaches drawing, painting, basic design, and participates in several lecture courses; Professor Edward Jankowski, an expert in nineteenth and twentieth century art; Associate Professors Pat Hill Cresson, who specializes in computer graphics, design, and illustration; and Assistant professor Jing Zhou, who teaches graphic and web design, flash animation, and fine arts.

Many well-placed alumni of the Monmouth University Fine Arts program have forged successful careers using their talents and skills—everywhere from major publishing corporations such as Time Inc. Magazines and Simon and Schuster to advertising and design firms from New Jersey to D.C.

Says Cresson: "When I first started teaching at Monmouth in 1994, there were a few dozen arts majors, all of whom were focused on education or fine art; today there are approximately 200 art and design students across all disciplines. Our growth has been extraordinary, and a big draw for talented and committed students considering the program has been the realization that our art department alumni have forged successful careers." MU

生 THE ART OF LIVING

BY ERINN DEIGNAN, A STUDENT IN THE HONORS SCHOOL

Life is the greatest gift we are given. We are born with the ability to think, perceive, and feel in ways which no other species can. This is the result of the existence of the soul.

The soul cannot be perceived through sensory experience. It can only be felt in brief moments that come to a hasty end all too soon. Yet the strength and power of these supernatural experiences attest to the fact of the soul's existence. The highest aspects of humanity are reflected in our souls, and through the creation of art it is possible to release the goodness and power which is held within us. Art allows us to express ourselves: our feelings, our emotions, and our humanity. Through it, we can transcend to a higher goal, and achieve a stronger purpose in our lives through a greater awareness of ourselves and others.

As humans, we are plagued by the idea of the event which we know is inevitable, yet which we can not predict. Death must come to all and is the only true certainty. It is a sobering thought, yet one which calls us to a higher purpose and gives us responsibility. If our time on earth is merely borrowed, there is a responsibility not to waste it. The only time spent constructively is time spent with others, and for the good of others. We can never be truly noble if we do not attempt to better the lives of our fellow men through charity. True art holds one purpose; to help people reach a higher goal through the viewing, reading, or hearing of the work. Through a greater understanding of ourselves, we will gain knowledge of our place in the human experience. This will lead to a desire to help others achieve this goal. When art leads us to an understanding our place and purpose in the world, the artist has acted nobly.

Art gives us a vision of the world as it should be. The world we live in is fraught with war, violence, depression, and anger. Life's complexities sometimes lead to confusion and despair. Many do not realize that their actions have the power to influence others. Yet, art has the power to take us away from the sometimes disturbing world we live in to an interior place where the imagination can roam free. It offers a glimpse of a world where we are not the center of the earth but rather a link in the endless chain of humanity. By showing us that our decisions have the power to change the state of our world, art gives us a priceless gift. Art's vision can only be realized if we allow it to affect our lives in a humbling way. If we do, we will learn the art of living.

Alumni NEWS

OLDEST KNOWN LIVING ALUM IS 96 YEARS YOUNG

In the same year that the U.S.S.R. was admitted to the League of Nations, the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) was established, and Bonnie and Clyde met their demise, Cora B. Williams received her diploma as part of Monmouth Junior College's first graduating class in 1934. Cora, who still resides in her hometown of Red Bank, is distinguished as Monmouth University's oldest known living alumni. We recently paid Cora a visit, and got her toes tappin' and fingers snappin' to a guitar rendition of "Young at Heart" (1954 music by Johnny Richards, lyrics by Carolyn Leigh.)

Cora is shown here with Vice President Jeffery N. Mills, PhD. who presented her with a certificate to honor her distinction as the oldest known living alumna.

JANUARY BEER TASTING

The Alumni Association, prompted by a group of enthusiastic young graduates, sponsored a tasting of unique beers earlier this year. The beers were carefully chosen to help the tasters enjoy a sampling of brews, aimed to please even the most discerning of palates. The January event attracted a large crowd, the majority of whom graduated within the last several years. Plentiful food and chance drawings for souvenirs contributed to the enjoyable event, but alumni especially had fun just meeting up with good friends.

a day in the life of the president

DATELINE: APRIL 18, 2006, WEST LONG BRANCH

For Paul G. Gaffney II, there is no such thing as a “typical day.”

Aside from seizing each and every one of them as Horace, the military man turned scholar and poet advised some 1,900 years ago, Monmouth’s president is accustomed to a workday that keeps him actively engaged in most of its 24 hours. A seasoned multi-tasker, talented educator, and able CEO, President Gaffney has parlayed his many skills to affect major strides in the areas of curricula, athletics, the arts, campus life, and community involvement—all in just three years as Monmouth University’s leader. ...

⌚ 5:32 AM

...Responds to the sound of reveille: in the Admiral's latest career, that means an electronic alarm clock that declares the beginning of another busy day. President Gaffney's "office" is far more than an area on the second floor of Wilson Hall: it includes the lion's share of the 155 acres of land on Monmouth University's campus—most of which he has combed by foot—from the athletic fields through the art galleries, into the library, and around the academic buildings...

⌚ 6:08 AM

...Warms up on the campus gym's treadmill, settling in to a 10-minute-mile pace in his Nike MaxAir running shoes. The well-worn treads of his favorite footwear reveal the toll of having logged hundreds of miles on West Long Branch land and in the University's Boylan Gym Fitness Center since he made Monmouth County his workout gym as well as his home...

⌚ 7:29 AM

...Grabs a light breakfast at the Student Center, taking time to greet the early-rising faculty and staff who are also starting their workdays on campus...then stops to chat with a group of students before continuing on with his morning...

⌚ 8:12 AM

...Heads to his Wilson Hall office, and detours to the top of the south lawn to catch a few minutes of soccer practice...chats briefly with Women's Soccer Coach Krissy Turner and new Assistant Coach Bonnie Young, the dynamic duo who leads the team in one of their off-season workouts...

⌚ 8:36 AM

...President Gaffney strides over to the Wilson Hall office, reviews his schedule for the day, responds to phone calls and e-mails, and—seated before the stacks of papers on his desk—systematically works through the piles and methodically tackles his in-box. (He works by the rule that he will never leave for the day without clearing his desk of action items.)

 9:02 AM

...Presides at the meeting of the University's Cabinet, which brings the twelve senior members of his staff to the table. The agenda includes discussions about recent student and faculty accomplishments and awards, community relations with our neighbors, donations to the University, improvements to the campus, and the exciting news that the entering freshman Class of 2010 has been filled well ahead of schedule. "Every vector at the University is good...academic strides, classroom dynamics, successful athletic teams, and a lot of continued optimism and confidence about the future of the campus and its community. ..."

 12:04 NOON

...Meets with two officials who recently joined the Monmouth County Board of Chosen Freeholders—Lillian Burry, who was elected in November 2005, and Anna Little, who was appointed to the post—over a working lunch in the Commons conference room...then welcomes the Christie Todd Whitman Scholars who are convened in the Club Lounge. ...

 1:01 PM

...Introduces and attends a lecture, slide show, and video presentation on African Ceremonies: an Exploration of Ancient Cultures in the Pollak Theatre. The riveting event draws a large crowd from the campus and local community, and acquaints the audience with authors and photographers Carol Beckwith and Angela Fisher, whose research and travels stretched from Swaziland to Morocco. The event, followed by a lively reception, is sponsored by longtime friend of the University, Mrs. Betty G. Young, the Office of the Provost, the Office of Academic Program Initiatives, and the Global Understanding Project. ...

President Gaffney finds a shaded table outside the Student Center, where he catches up on his messages via cell phone and returns time-sensitive calls. ...Never out of touch with his busy office for long, he discusses updates regarding his evening schedule with Executive Assistant to the President Janet Fell. ...

 4:10PM

...After the softball team's narrow 5-4 victory over Sacred Heart in the first-game of a doubleheader, Monmouth shuts out the Pioneers 2-0 in the second, spurred on by the cheers of the Hawks fans in the bleachers—including President Gaffney; Ms. Nancy DiLeo, mother of catcher Lisa DiLeo; and Ms. Cindy Mignona, mother of outfielder Gina Mignona. ...

 5:23PM

...Joins avid Monmouth sports fan and alumni parent Jim Barlow in the Hawks' baseball bleachers, where they cheer on the team to a 6-3 victory over Iona—Monmouth's 15th win in its last 16 games. Barlow has shown his support of the athletic program off the field as well. The Robert B. and Mary F. Barlow Memorial Scholarship is awarded annually to student-athletes who have achieved a 3.0 academic average or better, and who possess the desire and ability to compete in sports at a level consistent with the established athletics program. Says Barlow: "I've yet to run into a athlete who hasn't been a great kid. ..."

 6:45PM

...President Gaffney greets Congressman Holt, along with his aide and District Representative for Military Affairs, Steve Hildner '03, as they enter the Political Science Club's Nuclear Threat Roundtable. Holt moderates a panel that includes Dr. Barbara Reagor, Director of the Monmouth University Center for Rapid Response Data Systems, Dr. Joseph Patten, professor of Political Science, and Monmouth University students. ...

 7:09PM

On this atypical unscheduled night and rare of days when Linda Gaffney is not participating in any official business with the President, it is family man Paul G. Gaffney who travels the short distance to his home on Cedar Avenue, where he enjoys a late dinner and quiet evening with his wife.

President Gaffney and former assistant executive director of the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, Lillian Borrone, wrote an informative article entitled the "Seaweed Revolution" that called for a greater response to protect the oceans in an effort to protect the health of the people. Because ocean ecosystems are inextricably linked to life on land, there is a dire need to protect the oceans. Recent threats facing ocean ecosystems and aquatic life include ocean currents which show signs of shifting patterns, large fish species whose populations have declined more than ninety percent, and harmful algal blooms: all the result of human pollution and neglect. If we are to restore the oceans' ecosystems, action must be taken to reverse the harmful cycle of ocean abuse. President Gaffney and Mrs. Borrone were honored in July as Stewards of the Estuary for their work on the U.S. Commission on Ocean Policy by The Coastal Marine Resource Center (CMRC), a not-for-profit organization dedicated to the conservation of the New York-New Jersey Harbor.

win-win

a win-win partnership

Since its founding in 1933, Monmouth University's students, faculty and staff, as well as its community of alumni and friends have worked together to create a vital intellectual and social environment. Beyond the classrooms, throughout the local communities, and across the oceans, Monmouth's reputation has gained global recognition as a distinguished institution of higher learning. Indeed, two Fulbright Scholars have accepted invitations to reside on our campus in the spring of 2007.

The University has made many significant strides in recent years in multiple areas. Monmouth has established four Centers of Distinction: the Marine and Environmental Studies Program, the Urban Coast Institute, the Polling Institute, and the Center for Rapid Response Data Systems. This past year, we have celebrated the debut of the Honors School and the growth of the Global Understanding Program. On the athletic front, Monmouth's programs have captured consecutive NEC Conference "Commissioner's Cups" for the past three years. Those who appreciate the fine and performing arts can enjoy some of the best programs and finest talents in the world at the Pollak Theatre on our beautiful campus. This kind of growth comes to fruition largely through the generosity of patrons who have become our partners in building the successes of our educational goals.

For those of you who have shared your resources with Monmouth University in the past, we thank you for your partnership and welcome your continuing support.
