GEORGIA: SWING TOWARD THE DEMOCRATS

But most voters still expect Trump to win

West Long Branch, NJ – The race for Georgia's electoral votes remains very close, but Joe Biden has gained ground on Donald Trump in the latest Monmouth ("Mon-muth") University Poll. Democrats have also improved their standing in the two U.S. Senate races, erasing a GOP lead in the regularly scheduled contest and leaving two Republicans fighting for a spot in the special election runoff.

Among all registered voters in Georgia, Biden is supported by 50% and Trump is supported by 45%. Another 2% say they will vote for Libertarian Jo Jorgensen and 2% are undecided. These results represent a small swing in the Democrat's favor, but the numbers are not statistically different from Trump's single point edge last month (47% to 46% for Biden) or the tied result in July (47% each).

Similarly, the shifts in Monmouth's likely voter models[+] are not statistically significant, but they do show Biden with a nominal lead for the first time. In a high turnout model, Biden has 50% support and Trump has 46%. Trump led in this model by 2 points in September and one point in July. The race is tighter using a lower turnout model at 50% Biden and 48% Trump, whereas the incumbent led by 3 to 5 points in this model in prior polls. Trump won Georgia by five points in 2016.

More than half (58%) of registered voters in Georgia report having already cast their ballots. Biden leads among this group by 55% to 43%. Trump has a 48% to 44% edge, though, among those who have yet to vote. When the sample is put into different likely voter models, Trump pulls further ahead among the vote that is still outstanding – 53% to 41% for Biden in a high turnout scenario and 59% to 36% at a lower level of turnout.

"Trump is likely to win the Election Day vote. The question is by how much. The Democratic voters left on the table at this point tend to be less engaged and thus harder to turn out. So, it is still possible for Trump to make up his deficit in the early vote," said Patrick Murray, director of the independent Monmouth University Polling Institute.

Despite Biden's consistent lead in the national polls, though, Georgia voters are more likely to expect Trump (51%) will win a second term. Just 42% believe the challenger will emerge victorious.

Trump maintains an advantage among Georgia voters aged 65 and older – leading Biden by 58% to 42% now, versus 61% to 36% in September. This is noteworthy because Biden has led among senior voters both nationally and in the other swing states Monmouth has polled in the past month. However, Biden is able to offset his deficit in Georgia with support from younger voters, who make up a relatively larger share of the electorate here than in other swing states. He currently holds a 54% to 40% lead over Trump among voters under 50 years old, up from his 47% to 42% lead with this group last month.

Biden maintains an advantage in 14 swing counties* where the vote margins were closest in the 2016 presidential election. He leads Trump among registered voters in these counties by 55% to 35%, similar to his 54% to 34% margin in September. He is also holding steady in counties that went solidly for Hillary Clinton in 2016 (71% to 27% now, versus 70% to 24% las month). Trump has a strong 64% to 33% lead in the counties he won handily four years ago, but this is not quite as wide as last month (71% to 25%).

"Biden seems to have made some inroads in deep red parts of Georgia. He won't win these areas, but he can carry the state if he is able to get close to a third of the vote there," said Murray.

– Senate contests –

Republican incumbent David Perdue has lost his lead in Georgia's regularly scheduled U.S. Senate election. Among all registered voters, Democratic challenger Jon Ossoff is backed by 49% and 46% support Perdue. Libertarian Shane Hazel earns 2% and 2% are undecided. Perdue led by 6 points among registered voters in prior Monmouth polls (48% to 42% in September and 49% to 43% in July).

Among voters who have already cast their ballots, Ossoff holds a 54% to 43% lead. Among those yet to vote, Perdue has a 51% to 42% edge.

The race is close among likely voters. Ossoff holds an insignificant 2-point lead over Perdue (49% to 47%) in a high turnout scenario while the race is virtually tied using a lower turnout model (49% to 48%). However, just one month ago, Perdue held anywhere from a 5-point (high turnout) to 8-point (low turnout) lead depending on the likely voter model.

The other Senate seat will be decided by a special election, featuring a blanket primary with 20 listed candidates on the November ballot. Democrat Raphael Warnock has pulled into a clear lead, with 41% support among registered voters, up from 21% in September and just 9% in July. Warnock's chief Democratic rival Matt Lieberman has 4% support, down from 11% last month and 14% in the summer.

The battle for second place is very close between two Republicans. Incumbent Kelly Loeffler, who was appointed to the seat earlier this year, has 21% support and Congressman Doug Collins has 18%. This is similar to their standing in September (23% Loeffler and 22% Collins) and July (26% Loeffler and 20% Collins). The current placement of the top candidates in these registered voter results – Warnock, followed by Loeffler and Collins – is nearly identical in Monmouth's likely voter models.

"Loeffler and Collins are now battling it out for a spot in the runoff. It may come down to who is seen as the stronger Trump loyalist among Republican voters," said Murray.

Overall, 33% of Georgia voters say Loeffler is more supportive of President Trump while 12% say Collins is the bigger Trump booster. Another 31% say both are equally supportive of Trump. Among Trump backers in the presidential contest, 34% say Loeffler is the stronger Trump supporter while 19% say it is Collins, and 30% say both are equally supportive.

A runoff election will be held between the two highest vote earners if no candidate achieves an outright majority next week. Warnock currently holds a head-to-head lead against both Republicans among registered voters – 49% to 41% against Loeffler and 51% to 39% against Collins. The runoff will almost certainly see lower turnout than next week's general election. The race is closer among those most likely to vote in a January runoff, but the Democrat maintains a lead – either 51% Warnock to 45% Loeffler or 52% Warnock to 45% Collins.

"The fight for a spot in the runoff has gotten nastier between the two GOP candidates. And the main beneficiary appears to be the Democrat," said Murray.

The Monmouth University Poll was conducted by telephone from October 23 to 27, 2020 with 504 Georgia registered voters. The question results in this release have a margin of error of +/- 4.4 percentage points. The poll was conducted by the Monmouth University Polling Institute in West Long Branch, NJ.

* 2016 presidential margin by county groupings:
Swing (21% of turnout) – 14 counties where the winning margin for either candidate was less than 10 points, with a cumulative vote of 49.6% Clinton and 46.0% Trump.
Clinton (34% of turnout) – 22 counties Clinton won by more than 10 points, with a cumulative vote of 68.8% to 27.7%.
Trump (45% of turnout) – 123 counties Trump won by more than 10 points, with a cumulative vote of 70.1% to 26.6%.

METHODOLOGY

The Monmouth University Poll was sponsored and conducted by the Monmouth University Polling Institute from October 23 to 27, 2020 with a statewide random sample of 504 Georgia voters drawn from a list of registered voters. This includes 160 contacted by a live interviewer on a landline telephone and 344 contacted by a live interviewer on a cell phone, in English. Monmouth is responsible for all aspects of the survey design, data weighting and analysis. The full sample is weighted for party primary vote history, age, gender, race, education, and region based on state voter registration list information and U.S. Census information (CPS 2018 supplement). Data collection support provided by Braun Research (field) and Aristotle (voter sample). For results based on the full voter sample, one can say with 95% confidence that the error attributable to sampling has a maximum margin of plus or minus 4.4 percentage points (unadjusted for sample design). Sampling error can be larger for sub-groups (see table below). In addition to sampling error, one should bear in mind that question wording and practical difficulties in conducting surveys can introduce error or bias into the findings of opinion polls.
