NORTH CAROLINA: PREZ RACE STAYS TIGHT; DEM SENATE CANDIDATE GAINS

Incumbent maintains lead in governor's race

West Long Branch, NJ – It continues to be a very tight race for president in North Carolina according to the Monmouth ("Mon-muth") University Poll. The race for U.S. Senate has grown a little more favorable for the Democratic candidate since September, despite revelations of an extramarital entanglement. The poll also finds the incumbent governor maintains an advantage in his reelection bid, although by a slightly smaller margin than he did one month ago.

Among all registered voters in North Carolina, the race for president stands at 49% for Joe Biden and 46% for Donald Trump. Another 3% support Jo Jorgensen (Libertarian), less than 1% support other third party candidates, and 2% are undecided. Among likely voters, Biden leads 50% to 46% in a high turnout scenario while the race is almost even at 49% for Biden to 48% for Trump using a low turnout model. These results are similar to Monmouth's September poll.

Biden has made gains in 22 counties where the vote margins were closest in the 2016 presidential election. The Democrat currently holds a 59% to 38% edge among registered voters in these swing counties* where the aggregate vote went to Hillary Clinton by a single point. The presidential race was basically tied in these counties last month. Biden also has a 58% to 35% margin in counties that went solidly for Clinton (by a similar 27 points in 2016), which is basically unchanged from September. Biden's swing county gains have been offset by a strengthening of Trump's position (61% to 35%) in the counties he won handily four years ago. The current numbers are better than the president's 17-point lead in these counties last month, but still lag his 34-point aggregate victory there four years ago.

"There has been some shifting within the electorate but the overall picture remains the same – another tight presidential contest in North Carolina. Basically, it looks like Trump has been locking in his base at the expense of swing voter support," said Patrick Murray, director of the independent Monmouth University Polling Institute. Each of the last three presidential elections were decided by fewer than four percentage points in North Carolina.

Of four issues asked about in the poll, the most salient to voters is the potential breakdown of law and order, which 56% of North Carolina voters say worries them a lot. Just under half (48%) worry a lot about the coronavirus pandemic, while about 4 in 10 worry a lot about having access to medical care when they need it (39%) and knowing they will have a stable income over the next year (39%).

"The Trump campaign has been successful in elevating law and order to the top of voters' minds. There's only one problem. This issue is not a slam dunk for their side," said Murray.

When asked who they trust more to maintain law and order, 46% of voters choose Trump, but a similar 43% choose Biden. The challenger has the edge when it comes to voter confidence in handling the pandemic – 47%, to 38% who trust the incumbent more. Biden also has the lead – 46% to 38% – on voter trust in keeping health care affordable and accessible. Trump's best issue area is creating jobs and strengthening the economy, where he has a 49% to 38% trust advantage over Biden.

"The issue where Trump is strongest, jobs and the economy, is the one that voters – and crucially, independent voters – seem to be less worried about right now," said Murray.

Biden has a very slight edge on the empathy metric. Just over half (53%) of North Carolina voters say he has at least some understanding of the day to day concerns of people like them while just under half (47%) say the same about Trump.

– U.S. Senate –

The Monmouth University Poll finds North Carolina's U.S. Senate election has shifted in the Democrat's favor since last month. Among registered voters, challenger Cal Cunningham has 48% support and first-term Republican incumbent Thom Tillis has 44% support. Other voter support goes to Libertarian Shannon Bray (3%) and Kevin Hayes of the Constitution Party (<1%), with 3% undecided. The race was virtually tied in September's poll at 46% for Cunningham and 45% for Tillis.

Among likely voters in a high turnout scenario, Cunningham leads Tillis by 49% to 44% (versus a 47% to 45% lead in September). Using a lower turnout model, the race is a tight 48% for Cunningham and 47% for Tillis (compared with a tied race at 46% each in September). Tillis won the seat in 2014 by just under two percentage points against then-incumbent Kay Hagan.

Both major party candidates in the senate race unintendedly made headlines in the past two weeks – the challenger for extramarital romantic texts and the incumbent for acquiring Covid-19 after attending the White House super-spreader event. Voter opinion of Cunningham has flipped from positive to negative over the past month. He currently earns a 25% favorable and 33% unfavorable rating, with 43% having no opinion. His September numbers were 34% favorable, 22% unfavorable, and 44% no opinion.

At the same time, very few voters (14%) feel that the sexting revelation disqualifies Cunningham from holding office. Another 32% say this behavior calls his character into question but is not a disqualifier, while just over half (51%) say this should only be an issue for him and his family. One way to look at how this problem may impact Cunningham is to isolate voters who have the greatest potential for ticket splitting. Among this group – defined as voters who are not firmly committed to voting for either both Republicans or both Democrats in the president and governor races – 54% say Cunningham's behavior is not their business, while 28% say it does raise some questions about the candidate's character but does not disqualify him. Only 15% actually consider it a disqualifying factor for holding office.

"North Carolinians may frown on Cunningham's behavior but few think it has any bearing on his fitness for office. In fact, at a time when swing voters have had their fill of hyperpartisanship, it's possible that this story coming out now could actually hurt Tillis a bit," said Murray.

North Carolina voters give Tillis a 30% favorable and 34% unfavorable rating, with 37% offering no opinion of him. The incumbent held a 35% favorable and 35% unfavorable rating in September, with 31% having no opinion. Half (50%) of the electorate feels Tillis did not take the pandemic seriously enough before he came down with Covid himself, while just 37% believe he did take it seriously.

An interesting side note in the poll findings is that more North Carolina voters know about Cunningham's sexting activity (80%) than know about Tillis's diagnosis (69%). There is no partisan difference in awareness of Cunningham's news, but Republicans (61%) are less likely than Democrats (74%) and independents (71%) to have heard about Tillis's condition.

– Governor –

The race for governor has been fairly stable over the past month. Democratic incumbent Roy Cooper holds a 51% to 44% lead over his Republican challenger, current Lieutenant Governor Dan Forest, among registered voters. Libertarian Steven DeFiore (1%) and Al Pisano of the Constitution Party (<1%) get very little support, while 3% of voters remain undecided. The incumbent maintains a lead among likely voters by 52% to 44% in the high turnout model and 51% to 46% in the low turnout model. Cooper's lead in each model is narrower than Monmouth's September poll, although the differences are not statistically significant.

More than 6 in 10 North Carolina voters (63%) say Cooper has done a good job handling the coronavirus outbreak. Just 31% feel has done a bad job. This opinion is basically unchanged from one month ago.

"The bottom line is, do a good job on Covid and you'll have a decent shot at being reelected," said Murray. In 2016, Cooper beat then-incumbent Pat McCrory by less than a percentage point.

Just one-third (33%) of North Carolina voters plan to wait until Election Day to cast their ballots. The remainder are either voting early in person (49%) or returning their ballots by mail (15%). In fact,

10% of those polled report having already voted. This includes 19% of Democrats, 7% of independents, and 6% of Republicans.

The Monmouth University Poll was conducted by telephone from October 8 to 11, 2020 with 500 North Carolina registered voters. The question results in this release have a margin of error of +/- 4.4 percentage points. The poll was conducted by the Monmouth University Polling Institute in West Long Branch, NJ.

* 2016 presidential margin by county groupings:
> Swing (18% of turnout) – 22 counties where the winning margin for either candidate was less than 12 points, with a cumulative vote of 48.7% Clinton and 47.6% Trump.
> Clinton (40% of turnout) – Clinton won these 16 counties by 12 points or more, with a cumulative vote of 61.1% to 34.3%, with Wake and Mecklenburg making up the lion's share.
> Trump (42% of turnout) – Trump won these 62 counties by 12 points or more, with a cumulative vote of 65.3% to 31.1%.

METHODOLOGY

The Monmouth University Poll was sponsored and conducted by the Monmouth University Polling Institute from October 8 to 11, 2020 with a statewide random sample of 500 North Carolina voters drawn from a list of registered voters. This includes 136 contacted by a live interviewer on a landline telephone and 364 contacted by a live interviewer on a cell phone, in English. Monmouth is responsible for all aspects of the survey design, data weighting and analysis. The full sample is weighted for party registration, age, gender, race, education, and region based on state voter registration list information and U.S. Census information (CPS 2018 supplement). Data collection support provided by Braun Research (field) and Aristotle (voter sample). For results based on the full voter sample, one can say with 95% confidence that the error attributable to sampling has a maximum margin of plus or minus 4.4 percentage points (unadjusted for sample design). Sampling error can be larger for sub-groups (see table below). In addition to sampling error, one should bear in mind that question wording and practical difficulties in conducting surveys can introduce error or bias into the findings of opinion polls.
