PENNSYLVANIA: SENATE DEBATE SHOWS LITTLE IMPACT

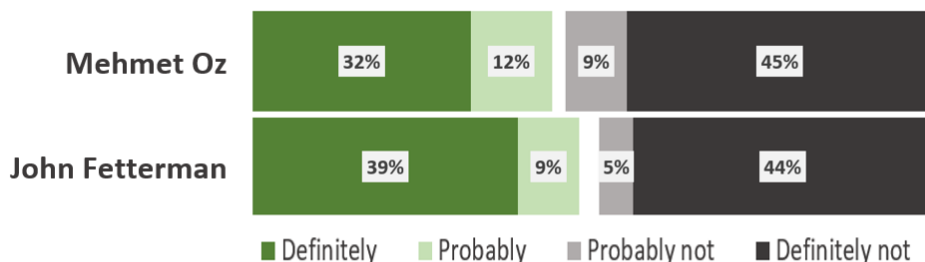

Voters divided on Dem's ability to serve, but few reconsider support after debate

West Long Branch, NJ – John Fetterman's edge over Mehmet Oz on key issues in Pennsylvania's U.S. Senate contest has narrowed, although the Democrat continues to be seen as having a better understanding of voters' day-to-day concerns. The last Monmouth ("Mon-muth") University Poll of this contest finds that concerns about Fetterman's health, particularly in light of last week's televised debate, have been raised by some voters, but the impact on their actual candidate choice has been minimal.

Nearly half of the electorate will either definitely (39%) or probably (9%) vote for Fetterman, which is similar to his support levels in prior Monmouth polls (48% total compared with 48% in early October and 49% in September). Oz, on the other hand, continues to make small but steady gains in support, with 32% definitely supporting him and 12% probably supporting. His combined 44% support level is about the same as 43% in early October and up from 39% in September, although it is worth noting that Oz's "definite" support has increased by 7 points since early October, while Fetterman's

"definite" support has only gone up by 2 points. The increase in Oz's overall backing has been most significant among independents, going from a combined 29% to 41% in Monmouth's polling since September.

PENNSYLVANIA: US SENATE CANDIDATE SUPPORT

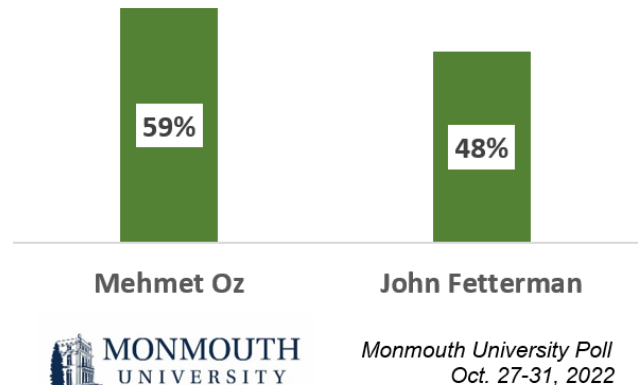

"The month-to-month shifts in support for Oz are not statistically significant. The overall trend suggests he has been chipping away with some voters who have not been completely comfortable with him, but that mainly happened prior to the debate. Fetterman’s performance may have had an impact on the margins but we don’t see any evidence of a wholesale shift in the race,” said Patrick Murray, director of the independent Monmouth University Polling Institute.

Nominally, more voters believe (48%) rather than disbelieve (38%) Fetterman’s explanation that his speaking problems do not affect his ability to think or do his job. Another 12% are unaware that Fetterman has had trouble speaking in public. In terms of direct impact, 3% of the Pennsylvania electorate – including 7% of independent voters – say they are reconsidering their candidate choice because of what they saw in last week’s debate. Another 22% say the debate raised serious concerns but did not cause them to reconsider their vote. Most voters either report no serious concerns from the debate (46%) or did not see or hear anything about the debate (27%). Still, fewer voters see Fetterman as capable of effectively serving a six-year senate term (48%) than say the same about Oz (59%).

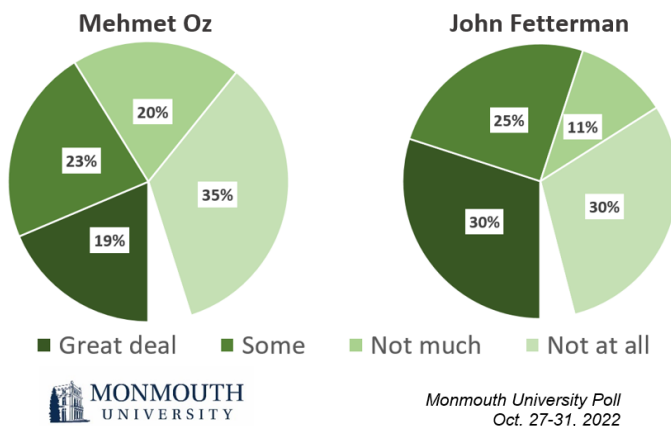

PENNSYLVANIA: CAPABLE OF EFFECTIVELY SERVING SIX-YEAR SENATE TERM

“We asked about each candidate’s ability to serve before we introduced any questions on Fetterman’s health issues in the poll. This means the differential response in these results is not a product of question priming, but rather suggests that at least some voters are considering the impact of his recent stroke. In the end, though, many other factors appear to be more pressing for voters,” said Murray.

The poll finds that Fetterman’s issue advantage from earlier in the fall campaign has shrunk in some key areas. He still holds a small edge on being trusted more to handle jobs, the economy and cost of living – 46% to 38% for Oz – but he has lost his earlier leads on crime – now 42% Oz to 42% Fetterman – and immigration – 41% Oz to 37% Fetterman. On the other hand, Fetterman (55%) continues to outpace Oz (42%) for being seen as having at least some understanding of Pennsylvanians’ day-to-day concerns.

The poll does not attempt to predict turnout, but past voter history metrics and self-reported motivation give a picture of a range of possible outcomes. Among voters who participated in the 2020 presidential election, similar numbers definitely (39%) or probably (9%) support Fetterman as those who definitely (33%) or probably (12%) support Oz. The race is also close among those who voted in the 2018 “blue wave” midterm election, with support for Fetterman (42% definite and 7% probable) similar to that for Oz (35% definite and 10% probable). Among the 2 in 3 voters who are extremely motivated to turn out this year, support for Fetterman (46% definite and 5% probable) is slightly higher than for Oz (39% definite and 8% probable). Among voters who have already returned a mail ballot or intend to vote early – about one-quarter of the electorate – Fetterman has a clear edge with 68% backing him to just 25% for Oz. The Republican has greater support among those who plan to vote on Election Day – 52% compared with 41% who back the Democrat.

“Here’s your reminder that, regardless of the outcome, Oz will almost certainly have a lead in the Election Day vote tally. That gap will narrow and perhaps be overtaken as legally cast mail ballots are counted in the ensuing days. This fact won’t stop the conspiracy theorists, but there you have it,” said Murray.

Pennsylvania voters continue to have a largely negative view of the Republican nominee at 40% favorable and 53% unfavorable. Opinion is split on the Democrat at 47% favorable and 46% unfavorable. Both ratings have been fairly consistent throughout the fall campaign, with the exception of a small nominal shift in both Oz’s positives and Fetterman’s negatives; each has gone up by 4 points since September. Currently, 45% of voters have definitely ruled out voting for Oz and a similar 44% say the same for Fetterman. This number has been fairly consistent for the Republican all fall, although the current results represent a 6-point increase in opposition to the Democrat since September.

“Oz is hanging in this race despite the fact that most Pennsylvania voters don’t really like him,” said Murray.

Additionally, 4% of voters say they will definitely vote for a third-party candidate. These voters are equally divided between Democratic and Republican partisans, however, so it is not clear if they are drawing support away from one of the major party candidates more than the other.

In other poll results related to Fetterman’s health, more voters say he has been transparent about his current health status (50%) than say he has not been (41%). They are divided on whether there has been too much (31%), not enough (29%), or the right amount (29%) of media coverage of Fetterman’s health. More than 7 in 10 Pennsylvania voters personally know someone who has had stroke-related problems similar to Fetterman. However, this familiarity, or the lack thereof, has little impact on opinion about Fetterman’s health status or overall candidate support when controlling for partisanship.

The poll also finds Pennsylvania voters remain divided on their preference for which party should control Congress – 48% choose the Democrats and 45% choose the Republicans. Support for a GOP led Congress has dipped insignificantly by two points since early October while Democratic backing has held steady. In statistical terms, party preference for Congress has remained evenly divided throughout the fall.

The Monmouth University Poll was conducted by telephone from October 27 to 31, 2022 with 608 Pennsylvania registered voters. The question results in this release have a margin of error of +/- 4.5 percentage points for the full sample. The poll was conducted by the Monmouth University Polling Institute in West Long Branch, NJ.

METHODOLOGY

The Monmouth University Poll was sponsored and conducted by the Monmouth University Polling Institute from October 27 to 31, 2022 with a probability-based random sample of 608 Pennsylvania voters drawn from a list of active registered voters who participated in at least one general election since 2016 or have newly registered since the 2020 election. This includes 182 contacted by a live interviewer on a landline telephone and 426 contacted by a live interviewer on a cell phone, in English. Monmouth is responsible for all aspects of the survey design, data weighting and analysis. The full sample is weighted for party registration, age, gender, race, education, and region based on state voter registration list information and U.S. Census information (CPS 2018 supplement). Data collection support provided by Braun Research (field) and Aristotle (voter sample). For results based on this sample, one can say with 95% confidence that the error attributable to sampling has a maximum margin of plus or minus 4.5 percentage points (adjusted for sample design effects). Sampling error can be larger for sub-groups (see table below). In addition to sampling error, one should bear in mind that question wording and practical difficulties in conducting surveys can introduce error or bias into the findings of opinion polls.
