NATIONAL: DEMOCRATS WANT A NATIONAL PRIMARY

Little change in 2020 Dem contest, Trump reelect

West Long Branch, NJ – There has not been a lot of change in the outlook for 2020 over the past month. President Donald Trump’s reelection prospects remain underwater, while Joe Biden holds onto a slim lead in what remains a persistently crowded field for the Democratic nomination. The latest national Monmouth University Poll also finds that most Democratic voters feel Iowa and New Hampshire have too much influence over the nominating process and would rather see a single national primary. They also say that candidate gender is not a consideration in who would be the best choice to take on Trump – despite the continuing media storm over a conversation between Bernie Sanders and Elizabeth Warren on the subject. Among nine presidential candidates asked about in the poll, Andrew Yang is the only one with a net positive rating among all voters nationwide.

Just over 4 in 10 (41%) registered voters feel that Trump should be reelected, while a majority (57%) say it is time to have someone new in the Oval Office. These numbers have not moved much over the past few months (43% reelect and 54% someone new in December and 42%-55% in November). The current results are also similar to late September when news about the president’s Ukraine call broke (39%-57%) and August when the House impeachment inquiry was just getting started (39%-57%). Trump currently has a personal rating of 43% favorable and 55% unfavorable among registered voters – which includes 35% with a very favorable opinion and 51% with a very unfavorable opinion.

Democrats and Democratic-leaning voters continue to be divided over who they want to face Trump in 2020. The top contenders include Biden (30%, from 26% in December), Sanders (23%, from 21%), and Warren (14%, from 17%). The next tier consists of Mike Bloomberg (9%, from 5% in December), Pete Buttigieg (6%, from 8%), and Amy Klobuchar (5%, from 4%). Yang is at 3% (identical to 3% in December), while none of the other five candidates included in the poll tops 1%.

“With the exception of Bloomberg’s entry, this race looks pretty much like it did six months ago. But that stability masks the potential for sizable swings once the first contests are held. Iowa and New Hampshire will play a major role in shaping national voter preferences,” said Patrick Murray, director of the independent Monmouth University Polling Institute.

When asked about the party nomination calendar, Democratic voters express a desire for changing the current system of selecting their party’s nominee. From a list of four options, a clear majority of party voters (58%) say they would rather have a single national primary where every state would hold its contest on the same day. Just 11% would keep the calendar the way it is now, with Iowa and New Hampshire going first, followed by Nevada, South Carolina and then the Super Tuesday states. Another 15% would like to modify the current system by letting a few other states hold their contests on the same days as Iowa and New Hampshire and 10% would rather see grouped state primaries. Even among voters who live in the early states that will vote through Super Tuesday, most would rather switch to a national primary (54%) rather than keep the current calendar as it is (14%) or even go with either of the other two modifications presented in the poll (14% other states join Iowa and New Hampshire and 11% grouped primaries).

A majority of Democrats (56%) nationally say that voters in states like Iowa and New Hampshire have too much influence on who wins the party nominations for president. Only 25% say these early states have the right amount of influence, while another 8% say they do not have enough influence. A key concern for Democrats is that the process does not give all types of voters in the party the same level of input on the outcome. Overall, 62% say that the current primary calendar gives some types of voters more influence than others, while just 26% say that all blocs of voters in the Democratic Party – including those with different political views as well as those from different racial and ethnic backgrounds – have an equal voice in the party’s presidential nomination process.

Democratic voters seem less concerned about the vetting effect of the current nomination calendar. Just 26% feel having Iowa and New Hampshire go first makes it less likely that the party will nominate the best candidate for president, while 12% say the current process is actually more likely to produce the best nominee. Half (50%) say that having these two states go first makes little difference in the likelihood that Democrats will nominate the best candidate for president.

“Most Democratic voters would like to see an overhaul of the primary calendar. This view appears to be more out of a sense of fairness to the party’s diverse electorate than concerns they might have about the ability of Iowa and New Hampshire voters to properly vet the field,” said Murray.

Democratic voters in the first two 2020 states have a different attitude on some, but not all, of these questions. According to separate Monmouth polls conducted earlier this month, just 16% of likely Iowa caucusgoers and 20% of likely New Hampshire primary voters feel their states have too much influence on the nomination process, compared with 56% of Democrats nationwide who feel this way. Fewer than 4 in 10 of these first-in-the-nation voters agree that the current calendar gives all types of Democrats an equal voice in the nomination (37% Iowa and 38% New Hampshire), which is still higher than party opinion nationwide (26%). On the other hand, most voters in these two states agree with their fellow Democrats that having Iowa and New Hampshire go first makes little difference in the likelihood that the party will nominate the best candidate for president (52% Iowa, 63% New Hampshire, and 50% national), although more national Democrats say the current calendar is less likely to produce the best possible nominee (26%, versus 9% in both Iowa and New Hampshire).

Candidate gender has become a hot media topic in the Democratic race for president, but it does not appear to be a concern for the party’s electorate. About 3 in 4 Democrats (74%) say it does not matter whether the party nominates a man or a woman to run against Trump. The remainder are divided – 13% say it would be better to nominate a man, while 8% believe it would be better to nominate a woman. These results are nearly identical to April 2019 (77% no difference, 12% better to nominate a man, 7% better to nominate a woman). There are virtually no gender differences in responses to this question.

“It might make for great TV, but most Democrats seem immune to the ‘he said, he didn’t say’ dust-up between Sanders and Warren. Or at least they say that gender doesn’t matter,” said Murray.

Among Democratic and Democratic-leaning voters, three candidates lead the field in overall favorability. They are Biden (73% favorable and 21% unfavorable, similar to 76%-20% in December), Sanders (72%-24%, similar to 74%-21% in December) and Warren – although her favorability has dipped in the past month (66%-20% now, compared with 76%-15% in December). Yang’s popularity has increased in the same period (53%-18%, compared with 42%-17% in December). Klobuchar’s rating is similar to Yang’s (50%-18% now – she was not included in the December ratings, but her prior best showing on this metric was 32%-10% in May 2019). Buttigieg’s rating among his fellow Democrats has slipped slightly (49%-22%, compared with 53%-18% in December), while Bloomberg’s rating has risen (48%-31%, compared with 40%-39% in December). Tom Steyer earns a 33%-27% rating (the only other time he was included on this question, in August, he had a negative 9%-25% rating).

There has been little change in ratings of the leading Democratic contenders among all American voters (including Republicans and independents). Biden has a rating of 42% favorable and 49% unfavorable among all registered voters (similar to his 43%-50% ratings in both in November and December) and Sanders has a rating of 41% favorable and 52% unfavorable (similar to 41%-54% in both November and December). Warren has a rating of 38% favorable and 49% unfavorable (compared with 40%-50% in December and 42%-44% in November). Buttigieg gets a 32% favorable and 35% unfavorable rating (compared with 34%-35% in December and 27%-34% in November).

Bloomberg has a 33% favorable and 47% unfavorable rating among all registered voters, which is an increase in positive views since he first got into the race (26%-54% in December). Klobuchar earns a 28% favorable and 32% unfavorable rating and Steyer has a 20% favorable and 35% unfavorable rating. While Yang may be trailing the leaders in the Democratic horse race, he outpaces the rest of the field in one area. His 33% favorable and 29% unfavorable rating makes him the only candidate included in the poll who has a nominally positive net rating among all registered voters.

“It may be time for Yang to start making the electability argument,” said Murray.

The Monmouth University Poll was conducted by telephone from January 16 to 20, 2020 with 903 adults in the United States. The results in this release are based on 847 registered voters and have a +/- 3.4 percentage point sampling margin of error. This release also includes results based on 372 voters who identify as Democrats or lean toward the Democratic Party which have a margin of error of +/- 5.1 percentage points. The poll was conducted by the Monmouth University Polling Institute in West Long Branch, NJ.

METHODOLOGY

The Monmouth University Poll was sponsored and conducted by the Monmouth University Polling Institute from January 16 to 20, 2020 with a national random sample of 903 adults age 18 and older, in English. This includes 363 contacted by a live interviewer on a landline telephone and 540 contacted by a live interviewer on a cell phone. The results in this poll release are based on a subsample of 847 registered voters. Telephone numbers were selected through random digit dialing and landline respondents were selected with a modified Trol Dahl-Carter youngest adult household screen. Monmouth is responsible for all aspects of the survey design, data weighting and analysis. The full sample is weighted for region, age, education, gender and race based on US Census information (CPS 2018 supplement). Data collection support provided by Braun Research (field) and Dynata (RDD sample). For results based on the registered voter sample, one can say with 95% confidence that the error attributable to sampling has a maximum margin of plus or minus 3.4 percentage points (unadjusted for sample design). Sampling error can be larger for sub-groups (see table below). In addition to sampling error, one should bear in mind that question wording and practical difficulties in conducting surveys can introduce error or bias into the findings of opinion polls.
